Berry growers have been busy during the past week getting ready to care for this season's crop. Crates, baskets and everything essential for handling the crop have been gotten ready. This is the first year that berries have been grown for market here and it looks like business to see the growers making such extensive preparations.

The heavy rains which fell Tuesday and Wednesday were welcomed by the farmers, but berry growers were not so well pleased. The berry crop is ripening now and should be hastened to market as fast as possible. The cool weather delays ripening and the rain prevents the gathering of that part of the crop which is ready for market.

Nelson Currie, a negro from the rural districts came to town Saturday and evidently attempted to drink some bootlegging establishment dry. Marshal Walker brought him in Saturday evening dead drunk. # Felsenthal Sons

Well Conditioned, Seasonable Stocks at Moderate Prices make Shopping at Felsenthal Sons Both Pleasant and Profitable

We long ago realized that there is more to a sale than the mere exchange of a commodity for a proportionate sum of money. With us the aim and object of a transaction is not only to meet fully and intelligently the requirements of our patrons, but to give them something beyond that which is included in the intrinsic value of the merchandise sold. We appreciate the trust imposed in us by reason of the position we hold with respect to our customers, and we conscientiously try to fulfill this obligation to the best of our ability.

An intimate association with the goods dealt in gives us a knowledge of them that is naturally more accurate than that of the occasional purchaser. This store has been in existence since 1849, a business hat under one name there can be no doubt but that people have found it profitable to patronize our store. We earnestly try to have all relations with us accompanied by a genuine pleasure on the part of our customer and the feeling that we have been a real help to them in securing things they need.
